ZOOMBOMBING: What to do if you find yourself hosting a meetiwigh malicious intruders

("Zoom-bombing" incidents are intended to be supportive; since they typically involve offensive language and/or images, they may also be quite distressing. Establishing a protocol for how to respond to the moment and in subsequent meetings will help your students colleagues articipants feel supported and give them a sense of agency. Ultimately, the goals at epto be behavior when it happens follow up with participants to check in and remedy negative effects; and prevent such a situation from recurring.

Following the bombing inident (i.e., if/when the group reconvenes

- x Host acknowledget incident and the harm it aused.
- x Depending on the situation, the group may decide collectively how to proceted class situation, the host/instructor may have to take more of a leading role.)
- x If participants are interested in support services on campus, someone in the group may volunteer to share that information as appropriate. This may be don chiat or in an email follow-up. (Again, in a class situation the host/instructor may have to taked ad.)
- x Host reviews appropriate security measures to ensure the situation does not recur
 - o SeeZOOM lest Practices